20. In 2007, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concerns over the Canadian government's use of the term "visible minorities," with country Rapporteur Mr. Thornberry expressing concern that "the use of the term visible minorities seemed to somehow indicate somehow that 'whiteness' was the standard, all others differing from that being visible," Committee on Elimination of Racial Discrimination Considers Report of Canada, available online at www.ohchr.org/en/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=8250&LangID=E [accessed 20 October 2012]. Canada meanwhile has argued that the term "visible minority" is "specific to the administration of the Employment Equity Act that seeks to address conditions or disadvantage in employment, in areas of federal jurisdiction, experienced by four specified groups—Aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities, members of visible minorities, and women." International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination: Nineteenth and Twentieth Reports of Canada, 12, available online at www.pch.gc.ca/ddp-hrd/docs/cerd/rpprts_19_20/19-20-eng.pdf [accessed 20 October 2012].
